Becoming a Parish Councillor – Frequently Asked Questions

What does the Parish Council do?	Parish councils make all kinds of decisions on issues which affect the local community. Some of the common topics which the parish council participate in are planning matters, speeding, roads and highways, local facilities such as play areas and pocket parks. Parish councils have limited powers to make decisions, but they do have the ability to negotiate with, and the power to influence those other organisations that make final decisions (such as county councils, health authorities, police etc.). In this respect parish councils are extremely powerful as the organisations that make the final decisions know that a parish council gives the best reflection of how a community feels about something and its views are taken seriously.
What does a Parish Councillor do and how much time does it take up?	Parish councillors have a dual role: • They represent the views and concerns of the residents of the parish to the parish council itself and, through it, to the district, county or unitary authority; • They report back to residents on issues affecting the parish. The Parish Council usually meets monthly for the full council meeting to which members of the public are also invited. Meetings may last 2-2.5 hours, depending on what is on the agenda. For more information on the council and roles, please visit our website. In addition to regular meetings Councillors are required to give time for ‘ad hoc’ meetings (e.g. meeting contractors or community groups) and working on projects or working groups. The workload varies, but an average weekly estimate of 2-3 hours would be reasonable. In return is the immense satisfaction of putting something back into your community.
How long do Parish Councillors serve for?	Once elected (or co-opted), parish councillors sit on the council for a maximum of four years. If they want to stay in the post, they can stand for re-election. This does not mean that you have to stay for four years. If you find it is not for you, or you can no longer meet the commitment, you can stand down
What support and training are available to councillors?	Councillors have substantial support performing their duties. Firstly, there is support from fellow councillors and the Parish Clerk who can offer a wide range of advice and guidance. Secondly, we provide access to extensive councillor training through Norfolk ALC (Norfolk Association of Local Councils).
